ARTIST STATEMENT

Carina Tenaglia is a self-taught abstract artist based in Washington, D.C. Her work is inspired by both natural and artificial elements, neutral palettes and metallic accents, and themes of social justice.

Carina aims to capture depth and light in each piece, as well as unique textural elements. Most of Carina's canvas pieces contain an average of 10-20 layers, the result of combining various techniques and patterns throughout her process.

ARTIST BIO

Carina grew up with her family in South Florida. Always active in sports and extracurricular activities, Carina always enjoyed bringing her design ideas to life.

After moving to Washington, D.C. for law school, Carina decided to resume painting first and foremost as a stress reliever and fun activity. Realizing she couldn't keep all of her inventory in her studio apartment, she began toying with the idea of beginning a business. While working at a large international firm during law school, she took the plunge and formally launched her business in June 2018. Since then, she's participated in various art shows, a juried exhibition, pop-ups at shops like West Elm, and sells artwork both directly and on consignment at several retail shops in the DMV area.

DETAILS

Carina's artistic process is constantly evolving. She derives inspiration for collections – some which are brought to life rapidly, and others, like her Humanity Collection, which take months of planning and intention to create. Each original piece has its own unique elements, textures, and story. Although Carina utilizes similar color schemes or techniques in given pieces, no two original works are the same.

Throughout the year, Carina typically has on average about three to five collection launches, ordinarily before and after the months of October through December. Based on her availability, she also accepts custom commission requests for one-of-a-kind original pieces. All available works and inventory quantities are actively maintained on her online website, Carinatenaglia.com.

Carina has also commissioned high-resolution images of several of her most popular pieces, which can be turned into high-quality archival prints on paper or canvas, upon request. For questions about other custom prints, please inquire about availability and rates.
